ROSES

All our Roses are listed under four general classifications—PERPETUALS, TEAS, BUSHES and CLIMBERS. Each type is of particular value in producing certain desired results. The varieties offered include the best of the old favorites and a large number of the best newer sorts in a wide range of color.

HYBRID PERPETUALS are hardy and vigorous sorts, growing into larger plants than Hybrid Teas, with larger, fuller, and often more fragrant flowers. In general their bloom is concentrated in one great display in late June.

HYBRID TEAS are the most popular and useful of all Roses, with flowers of wonderful color, form, and fragrance. If the plants are properly cared for, one crop of flowers quickly succeeds another from June through October.

BUSH ROSES include those sorts especially valuable for shrub effects. They are very hardy and produce masses of brilliant flowers in their season.

CLIMBING ROSES include both the older kinds known as Ramblers, which produce great masses of color in smaller flowers, and also the more recent remarkable introductions, which produce beautiful, large, individual flowers in clusters of excellent form and color, closely resembling Tea Rose flowers in many cases.
